Navy Recruit Looks For Homecoming

U. S. S. California

H. H. Hartvigsen,
Editor, Ocean Beach News
Ocean Beach,
California
Dear Mr. Hartvigsen —.

I have been traveling considerably during the last month and a half, and I've seen quite a lot of interesting places for a fellow who has been in service only five months.

I went aboard the transport, U. S. S. Chaumont at San Diego in mid-August, bound for Norfolk, Virginia. I was lucky in securing a job as cartoonist for the ship's daily newspaper, which allowed me more liberty and time to look around during our 4-day stay in Panama. The cities down there, Panama City and Colon, are not nearly as Americanized as one might suppose. Nearly all of the inhabitants are black, or partly so. The narrow streets and open front shops and bazaars lend an almost oriental appearance to Panama City, the larger of the two. Colon has straighter streets and somehow, looks more familiar and initing to a stranger. Cantinas, dance-halls, and beer-gardens abound in both cities. Bootblacks and street-venders, usually native boys aged from 6 on up, number in the hundreds. They are noisy, smiling, and insistent upon your patronage. Most of them speaking barely enough English words to carry on their business.

I was unable to get ashore in Cuba on the trip up the east coast and did not go ashore at Norfolk, as I was too busy, transferring to the battleship, U. S. S. California.

The following week was taken up in fall "war games" which nearly the entire fleet was in. The California spent a day abut two miles off the coast of Florida, at Miami, then dropped anchor at Guantanamo Bay, Santiago Province, Cuba, where it is now.

I have been ashore here nearly every day, firing on the machine-gun ranges, as a part of the activities of the fleet machine-gun school, of which I am a member. It's pretty country down here. Nice people too. They seem a bit better educated than the people of Panama.

In about a month, we leave here, with a possible short stop at Haiti. Then Panama again, and the west coast. Nearly everyone aboard the California is glad that "homecoming" is getting near.

It's been a fine voyage so far and bids fair to continue so—.

Your former printer's devil, office boy, etc.,

George Bergman, S2cl., U. S. N.

P. S.—Send me a paper when you can spare it.—I'm 'way back on what's happening at the Beach.

Mrs. Edythe Kenline of 4952 Santa Monica avenue is leaving Wilmington this evening on the steamer Yale for San Francisco where she will attend grand lodge meetings of the O. E. S. next week. Mrs. Susan Reinfrank, 1934 worthy matron of Point Loma chapter will join Mrs. Kenline at Wilmington to attend the sessions.

WICKERN 1935 PRESIDENT FELT VICE-PRESIDENT

Ed Wickern, popular groceryman of Sunset Cliffs Blvd., was on Wednesday elected to head Ocean Beach Kiwanis for the year of 1935. Dr. Frank R. Felt was elected as vice-president and Rollin Reed as treasurer.

Joe Restine as chairman of the day held a lively and interesting meeting. I. J. Claspill presented a "loving" cup to Doc Alderson, chief of the La Jolla travelers, who was present with Cap Messer, Mel Stewart and W. E. Edmiston, all members of La Jolla Kiwanis club.

All members of Kiwanis are looking forward with a great deal of pleasant anticipation to the forthcoming California-Nevada district convention to be held in San Diego next week, Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

OVER THOUSAND LOANS TO MODERNIZE HOMES

More than a thousand loans to modernize homes, business properties and farm buildings have been made by Bank of America in cooperation with the Federal Housing Administration, Will F. Morrish, president, announced today.

"The number of loans already made indicates clearly that a demand exists for ths type of credit," said Morrish, "and the volume of applications is on the increase thruout the entire state.

"To date, Bank of America has loaned $391,500 to carry out 1,003 individual modernization projects under the terms of the National Housing Act. At least as many applications are pending and the loans will be completed as soon as estimates of construction costs are supplied by the borrowers.

"So far, the principal demand for housing loans has come from the state's metropoltian areas," said Morrish. "This is probably because of the fact that farmers have not yet learned that this type of loan can be made to improve farm buildings and that their payments need not be made in monthly installments, but can be scheduled for payment when their crop money is received."

POT LUCK DINNER TONIGHT

A pot luck dinner will be served in the dining hall of the Methodist church Friday evening. It will mark the first of a series of social events for the church planned for the autumn. It will be in the nature of a family night.

Members and friends are invited and requested to bring the whole family. Everyone is asked to bring his own table service and sandwiches or a covered dish. Coffee will be served free. Special music will be provided.

MUSINGS WHILE MEANDERING

(By Merrill Stuart)

Back yards are like humans—they go native sometimes. They're not putting up a good "front" for visitors, not on parade except for the family and the milkman; so it's easy enough to relax, yes?

"Any old rags, bottles, junk today?" droned the junkman as he and his decrepit horse ambled by. "Plenty, man; help yourself," I muttered.

Milk bottles—thicker than the ants crawling over them, filled with filth, gray with stale milk, licked by animals. "I can tell exactly what kind f a housekeeper a wom what kind of a housekeeper a woman is by her milk bottles," an alert young milkman once said to me. He has plenty of chance to observe both housewives and bottles; therein lies food for thought.

Clothesline—all manner of intimate garments gayly slashing in breezes silken undies, flannel nightshirt; who wears which? thrifty-minded back yard—vegetables and flowers prettily combined, shell-lined paths between Small neat lawn with fish-pond in center mud-beaten enclosure, wide-open garbage pail, little old gray man, little old brown house; gray and brown nature's decaying colors. . . .

Restful lathhouse, cool with green ferns and graceful vines piano box and every other kind of box piled high—kindling wood sometime maybe climbing rose hiding garage aviary —canaries splitting throats in song bird-house for fledglings bright window boxes, pansy beds and wistaria trellis rustic gateway to alley, overthrown with gay morning glories chained howling canine pawing witchgrass cactus garden, rocks unclean rabbit hutch smelling to heaven; unhappy drooping fowls.

And that loveliest spot of all—great shade tree, seat for a weary meanderer to muse upon back yards and what their owners make of them.

A little labor—and rather than dumping grounds for junk, they become places of sweetness, coziness, seclusion for family pleasures. Extra labor maybe, but what a good use to put it to, and what an endless source of satisfaction!

Do you think back yards are seen only by the milkman and the junkman? The day hath a milion eyes, and down the royal alleys kings and queens might easily stroll—who knows?

Back yards reflect credit or discredit upon neighborhood and town; they reflect cific pride or its lack; they reflect civic pride or its lack; they

So——why shouldn't Queen Anne Front and Mary Ann Back both dress in their prettiest clothes and rival each other in attractiveness? They're sisters under the turf after all.

Comes now streamline hair-dressing to keep pace with streamline gowns and we in the gowns are racing along to keep up with streamline autos,railroad trains, airplanes,and what not. 'Tis an age of speed, and the world moves fast in its changing standards . . . I saw a woman powder her nose in twinkling of an eye recently without fuss or feathers; one of those wrist watch powder boxes snapped to wrist—handiest little gadget ever Evening dresses now adorned with copper, tin and ivory flowers; they don't wilt anyway, if that's any improvement on the real thing.

SERA Turns Down Request For Cleanup

At a meeting of the Ocean Beach Chamber of Commerce held Monday evening Frank B. McElwee and Albert Dumont reported on a visit to the office of the department of public works for the city of San Diego, requesting cleaning of the curbing of weeds, os well as other matters. Letters were read from Fred Rhodes and John L. Bacon, the latter SERA adminstrator, saying that the local SERA office had passed favorably upon the weed cleaning project but that the San Francisco office would not allow it to be carried out as it was not a new improvement. An effort was being made to have the San Francisco office reconsider the matter.

The organization went on record as being opposed to the enactment of the Alco law, prohibiting the possession of firearms, by everyone except some specially appointed officers.

A motion was also presented and carried, to hold a mass meeting, November 12th, to which all property owners would be invited and set forth their views as to whether or not houses in Ocean Beach should be rented to Japanese, during the summer vacation season, or at any other time.

A request was presented and the secretary ordered to write the city park commission asking that water be piped to Collier park for the convenience of ball players and those use these grounds for recreation.

Another request was directed sent to the city manager asking cleanup of the trash and refuse from the property between Tich's Tavern and Niagara avenue, along the board walk.

POINT LOMA ASSEMBLY

The women of the Point Loma assembly enjoyed a delightful afternoon when they met for their regular session on Thursday.

Mrs. Paul Reiss reviewed Madama Tchermavin's book entitled "Escape from the Soviets" and Sherwood Eddy's "Russia Today". Mrs. Reiss is a world traveller and her observations on Russian conditions and their bearing on our present and future welfare gave much food for thought.

Mrs. Virgil R. Knight and Edwina Taylor gave several vocal and piano numbers and Edwina recited "Naming the Pacific".

A "white-elephant table" afforded much fun as well as profit. his new feature promises to become very popular. Members bring articles which they do not want and these may be purchased for a very small sum by anyone who can make use of them.

Mrs. Jarvis L. Doyle and Mrs. W R. Spicknal were hostesses during the tea hour.

The Loman Reporter

The dedication of Ross Field in honor of Mr. Pete Ross, former principa of Point Loma High school, at the homecoming game with Oceanside on Friday, October 9 was felicitous in many respects. A large attendance of the students and faculty of Point Loma and Oceanside, the attendance of a considerable number of alumni and parents, the presence of Mr. Ross and the board of education in high fettle contributed to the happiness of the occasion. During the interval between halves of the game Mr. Swenson, assisted by John Plank, president of the student body, presented Mr. Ross with a gold life pass to Point Loma games. Ray Reynolds and Mrs. Muehleisen of the board of education then dedicated the improved athletic field to Mr. Ross, displaying the attractive new name plate to ornament the entrance to Ross Field. Mary Shreve, speaking for the girls of Point Loma High, concluded the tribute to Mr. Ross by the presentation of a copy of "Anthony Adverse" as a token of esteem and affection. As tho by prearrangement, the high school football huskies topped off the afternoon with a 6 to 0 victory over Oceanside.

——PLHS——

The seating of the crowd at the dedication of Ross Field was greatly facilitated by the section of bleachers loaned us by San Diego High school for the football season. Now for the turf field promised Point Loma in the near future by the board of education!

Among the interesing activities of the Point Loma High Campfire girls has been a series of programs on the subject of hobbies. The most recent of the series was upon "Flower Arangement as a Hobby". Putting the discussion of flower arrangement to a concrete application, a committee of girls with flowers, and the assistance of the metal shop with tomato cans and wire, achieved no mean result. Accordingly one morning last week the desks of a number of teachers blossomed with tasteful bouquets. It was a nice idea nicely carried out, Camp Fire Girls.

——PLHS——

Things have been moving with verve at Point Loma High for several weeks even to the extent of magic in our midst. This legerdemain was controlled by the capable, if elusive, hands of Captain T. Jones. One day last week Captain Jones offered Lomans a slight sample of his art with such overwhelming results in interest that he was scheduled for an auditorium performance on Tuesday morning of October 9, during the third period. There he appeared bringing what you will from Mr. Swenson's hat and howls of glee from the packed auditorium at ten cents apiece. The proceeds of this performance will be used to replenish the depleted student fund which is used thruout the school year for many helpful purposes.

——PLHS——

If you were to step behind the partition at one end of the library any school morning during the first period, you would fine two sisters in a quiet corner. One is reading and the other listening. Look again, and you become aware that the girl who listens so altertly is quite blind. The two Dahl sisters, recently from Hawaii, are newcomers to Point Loma High. The elder, Lulu, is a post graduate; the younger, Martha, is a twelfth grade student. Lulu Dahl is at school in Point Loma High this year to aid her handicapped sister Martha complete her high school work. Mrs. Neill has assigned a corner in the small work room off the library as a study corner for them. It speaks well for the sisters and the school that the physically blind can make their intellectual way in the same classes with those who have their sight.

——PLHS——

The commercial department at Point Loma High functions very concretely this semester with 133 students enrolled in bookkeeping, stenographic and salesmanship classes, and 145 enrolled in typing classes. The bookkeeping classes keep the accounts for the Pointer, the school paper, and for the Annual, outside of regular school time while typing classes handle the copy for both these publications and the Loman Reporter. One student salesman, Jim Claspill, recently sold 14 inches of advertising space and headed a committee that totaled $80.50 worth of tickets to the Hoover game, opening the football season. George Heylman, of the salesmanship class, is auditor for the student body, and the salemanship class will handle the tickets for the rest of the sports' season and the sale of the school Annual.

Exposition Building To Start At Once

With San Diego county already feeling the effects of the California Pacific International Exposition in renewed confidence and enthusiasm, and in employment for hundreds, plans were being laid today for the construction of the spectacle of next year.

With men already at work and more due to start in a few weeks, Balboa park, the 1400-acre grounds of the Exposition, soon will present a vastly changed appearance as exhibit palaces begin to go up.

Work on the interior of the present magnificent buildings of the park is nearing completion. New furnishings are being installed and in many instances the entire interior is being done over.

One of the first structures to be altered was the former Natural History building, now the Palace of Varied Industries, facing Laurel boulevard opposite the lily pond. Into this impressive structure the headquarters of the international Exposition were moved this week.

The plans of the great undertaking, the most impressive ever begun in the history of the West, call for the erection of nearly two-score new exhibit palaces to supplement those already built.

When the Exposition opens on May 29, a constant stream of visitors will begin flooding the Exposition grounds, continuing thru the run of the spectacle until a total attendance of upwards of 5,000,000 is registered, Exposition officials predicted.

Meanwhile, the Exposition's executive management announced that P. M. Massmann, former executive officer of "A Century of Progress", Chicago, had been appointed to represent the Exposition in the East. He is co-ordinating his efforts with Waldo T. Tupper, director of exhibits, who is operating out of the Chicago offices of the California enterprise.

Richard S. Requa, widely known California architect, has been named consulting architect of the Coast spectacle, the management announced. He will assist in planning reconstruction work in the park and in planning the new exhibit palaces to be erected.

One of the foremost features of the great $10,000,000 Exposition was revealed this week with the announcement of plans for a great Naval review of the coast and mass flight of hundreds of airplanes over the Exposition grounds. The Navy's contribution to the Exposition probably will be held in June.

WARREN - WALKER SCHOOL

During the last week the students have been organized into boys and girls glee clubs under the supervision of Miss McIntyre. Each club is working hard in preparation for a program to be given for the fathers and mothers of the students.

A great deal of interest has been shown in the art work under the direction of Mr. Ellison. Last week the girls in the 5th, 6th and 8th grades made attractive fringed table mats of burlap and raffia. The boys made wooden blocks for the kindergarten room. The lower grades drew crayon, story illustrations.

The upper grades in the study of speech arts are learning the importance of self expression and its value in adult life. They have also written original short stories and presented them for the enjoyment of the other students.

TEXTILE STRIKE IS ENDED—EVIDENCE PILES UP AGAINST LINDBERGH SUSPECT

By EDWARD W. PICKARD

©, Western Newspaper Union.

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S request that the great textile strike be called off and that the workers be taken back without discrimination, after he had received and approved the report of the special mediation board headed by Gov. John G. Winant of New Hampshire brought to an end the bitter struggle that had cost 14 lives and millions of dollars. The union leaders ordered the strikers to return to the mills, and all the way from Maine to Alabama the looms hummed again. The Winant report proposed the following four point program:

Gov. Winant

1—Appointment by the President of a textile labor relations board of three members to settle all questions of union recognition at the several textile mills and to handle all other employer-employee disputes in the industry.

2. An investigation by the Department of Labor and the federal trade commission of the textile industry's ability to meet the higher wage payments which the union is demanding.

3. A moratorium on the "stretch-out" system, whereby, the union claims, employers are adding to the work load of their employees; during the moratorium the textile labor relations board shall appoint a textile work assignment control board to plan a permanent control of the stretchout.

4. An investigation by the Department of Labor into the various classifications of work in the textile industry and the wage scale for each classification.

The end of the strike does not mean peace in the industry by a long ways, for Francis J. Gorman, vice president of the United Textile Workers and leader of the walkout, announced that a fight to unionize the industry "100 per cent" would be started immediately. It was considered certain the mill owners would combat this effort wherever possible.

Labor leaders claimed a significant victory in getting their complaints before impartial bodies for settlement and in the elimination of the NRA as the supervising body for the labor provisions of the various textile codes.

The mill owners disputed this contention, and one asserted that all the strikers had gained was a "three weeks' vacation without pay."

State troops and the army of private guards which stood watch at the mills throughout the strike began demobilizing soon after the strike end order was issued.

SO FAR President Roosevelt has not revealed his plans for relief for the coming winter, but the executive committee of the United States conference of mayors on unemployment relief has made its recommendations to him. These are, in effect, that a permanent federal relief fund should be established preparatory to the creation of a nationwide system of unemployment insurance. The report says:

"This permanent unemployment work relief fund and program should include the following features:

"1—It should include all workers of all types.

"2—The governments, federal, state, and municipal, should draw upon those benefited from the fund for work on public work relief projects.

"3—Such benefited persons should be paid prevailing wage rates up to the amount of the determined benefits.

"4—The United States should be divided into regions for the purpose of fixing weekly benefits in accordance with the regional costs and standards of living.

"5—General administration and supervision of the plan and fund should be the responsibility of the federal government."

Members of the committee are F. H. La Guardia, mayor of New York; Daniel W. Hoan, mayor of Milwaukee; C. A. Dykstra, city manager of Cincinnati; T. S. Walmsley, mayor of New Orleans; Paul V. Betters of Chicago, director of the conference; Frederick W. Mansfield, mayor of Boston; Watkins Overton, mayor of Memphis; Harry L. Davis, mayor of Cleveland; M. C. Ellenstein, mayor of Newark.

WHEN President Roosevelt's plan for a $75,000,000 "tree belt" from Canada to Texas, previously discussed in this column, was submitted to Controller General McCarl, that gentleman turned it down as an improper use of funds from the $525,000,000 emergency drouth appropriation. The President, however, has not abandoned the project, though he told the correspondents he was in full accord with the controller general's ruling that emergency drouth funds might be used for putting men to work planting trees, but could not be used for land purchases. He said the original plan of the administration was to begin the shelter belt project with $15,000,000 of drouth money, and that some of this was to be used to purchase land.

The President said the shelter belt project, designed to protect the Middle West region from future drouths, would be carried out, but that the initial funds would have to be taken from sources not yet determined.

REPORTS in Washington said the President was almost ready to announce the complete reorganization of the NRA, and that a new board to determine the blue eagle policy would be named, with Bernard M. Baruch, Raymond Moley and other prominent men as its members. One of them may be Gerard Swope, president of the board of General Electric, an advocate of industrial self-government, who has been conferring with Mr. Roosevelt. Of course this would mean that the one-man rule of NRA was to be ended, and there was much speculation as to what would become of General Johnson. There was doubt as to his willingness to accept a place in the new organization.

The Washington Post said that, besides the policy-making group, there would be named an administrative board of five, most of whom would be selected from the present NRA organization, and that it would be headed by an executive officer, probably Colonel Lynch. This paper also said that Donald R. Richberg, the NRA's general counsel, "who has emerged more and more as a Presidential adviser, is expected to have a prominent role in the reorganization." It may be he will be chairman of the policy group if Mr Baruch doesn't want that place.

ONE more member of the infamous Dillinger gang is dead and another wounded. Charles Makley and Harry Pierpont, in the Columbus penitentiary awaiting execution for the murder of Sheriff Sarber when they liberated Dillinger from jail at Lima, Ohio, fashioned guns from soap and other materials and tried to bluff their way out, as did Dillinger at Crown Point, Ind. But in this case the guards were not intimidated but opened fire with riot guns. Makley was fatally wounded, dying within an hour, and Pierpont was shot in the head and back. Seven other convicts who joined in the attempted break were put back in their cells without trouble.

GRESFORD coal mine near Wrexford, Wales, one of the best mines in the United Kingdom, was the scene of a terrible disaster such as occurs in colleries with distressing frequency. There was an explosion nearly four miles from the mouth of the pit when several hundred men were in the mine, and, despite the heroic efforts of rescue squads, 261 men lost their lives. New explosions and heavy accumulations of carbon monoxide forced the rescuers to quit and the shaft was sealed.

MORE than two thousand persons perished in a typhoon that swept over the richest industrial section of Japan in which are situated Osaka, Kobe, and Kyoto. Thousands of others were injured, and the property damage was enormous, probably running above $100,000,000. The army's munitions program suffered a great setback for scores of factories that were turning out guns and munitions were destroyed. Losses among the fishermen and farmers also were most serious.

EVIDENCE was presented to a grand jury in New York against Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the former German machine gunner and journeyman carpenter accused of extortion in connection with the Lindbergh baby kidnaping. Colonel and Mrs. Lindbergh flew from Los Angeles to give their testimony. The authorities considered they had an ironclad case against the suspect, who was arrested after he had passed a ten dollar note that was part of the ransom money handed over a garden wall by Dr. John F. Condon ("Jafsie") when the baby was supposed to be still alive. In Hauptmann's garage was found $13,750 of the ransom fund, his handwriting was found to be identical with that of the ransom notes, and there were many other facts plainly indicating his guilt. He explained his possession of the money by saying it was paid him by one Isidor Fische who later died in Germany, but this defense was said to have been exploded. New Jersey authorities expect to indict and try Hauptmann as the actual kidnaper and murderer of the Lindbergh child.

Bruno Hauptmann

In an attempt to save her husband, Mrs. Anna Hauptmann, wife of the accused man, declared that she could furnish an alibi for him on the night of the kidnaping. She said Hauptmann called for her every Tuesday and Friday during 1932 because she worked late as a waitress in a restaurant on those nights. March 1, 1932, when the baby was stolen, was on a Tuesday.

DANGER of war between Russia and Japan was lessened considerably by an agreement between them for the sale of the Chinese Eastern railway, long the source of threatening disputes. Russia has accepted a Japanese offer, made in behalf of Manchukuo, for the Soviet union's half-interest in the railroad—a vital transportation link in Manchukuo.

Delegates from Manchukuo left for Tokyo to participate in a conference to complete details of the transfer.

It was reported that Manchukuo would pay 140,000,000 yen ($40,600,000) for Russia's half-share in the railway and 30,000,000 yen ($8,700,000) as discharge allowances for Soviet employees. The road originally was owned jointly by Russia and Japan.

RUSSIA was duly admitted to membership in the League of Nations, only three votes in opposition being cast, and then was given a permanent seat in the council of the league. Maxim Litvinov, Soviet commissar for foreign affairs, pledged his nation to work through the league for world peace.

Declaring flatly that Russia would give up no attribute of its social system, Litvinov warned the assembly that "peace and security cannot be organized on the basis of shifting sands and verbal promises." It should be established, he said, "that any state is entitled to demand reasonable security from its near and remote neighbors." This, however, should never be interpreted as distrust, Litvinov added.

FEDERAL JUDGE W. CALVIN CHESTNUT of Baltimore handed down an opinion holding that the farm moratorium amendment to the federal bankruptcy act passed by congress last June is unconstitutional. This amendment, known as the Frazier-Lemke law, authorizes debt-ridden farmers to go into federal courts and reduce their obligations. The Judge held that it violates the rights of creditors as outlined in the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution and that it seeks to supersede the rights of state courts.

The court pointed out that each state has laws to protect both the creditor and the debtor. The Frazier-Lemke act, it was stated, wiped away the safeguards for creditors and amounted to confiscation of property.

WISCONSIN'S state primary was especially interesting because of the fact that the Democrats polled the largest vote by a wide margin, the La Follette Progressives and the Republicans trailing. The Democrats renominated Gov. Albert G. Schedeman, vigorous supporter of the New Deal. He will be opposed by Phil La Follette, who received the Progressive nomination without contest, and Howard T. Greene, Republican, who defeated former Governor Zimmerman and J. N. Tittemore.

John N. Callahan, former national committeeman, was named for the senate by the Democrats, and John B. Chappelle was the unopposed choice of the Republicans. Senator Robert M. La Follette, Jr., was of course nominated by his new party.

NOME, the once famous gold city of Alaska, lies in ruins, having been swept by flames with damage estimated at $3,000,000. Four hundred persons were rendered homeless, and most of the food supplies were burned up. Relief vessels with food and medical supplies were rushed to the place and there was no fear of shortage. The government at Washington granted $50,000 in direct assistance and planned other relief measures. The citizens were hurriedly procuring lumber and other materials in the hope of at least partly rebuilding the city before it is isolated by winter ice.

NEW ORLEANS, once the gayest of American cities, is in the dumps. Mayor Walmsley, scanning the records of the election in which his forces were defeated by those of Huey Long, discovered that the vice districts went largely for the Kingfish, although the latter had been scoring the city administration for permitting them to exist. So the mayor had the police give notice of eviction to all the proprietors of disorderly houses and gambling places. Now the city is remarkably pure, at least for a time. It was said the gamblers moved to the adjoining parishes of St. Bernard and Jefferson, which are controlled by Senator Long.

JAMES A. MOFFETT, federal housing commissioner, announced that on November 1 he would begin releasing funds for the construction of at least a million new homes.

Concerning the home modernization and repair phase of the program, the administrator declared that more than 1,000 communities have set up or are setting up committees to direct the program locally. He predicted that by Thanksgiving more than 5,000 municipalities will have such committees.

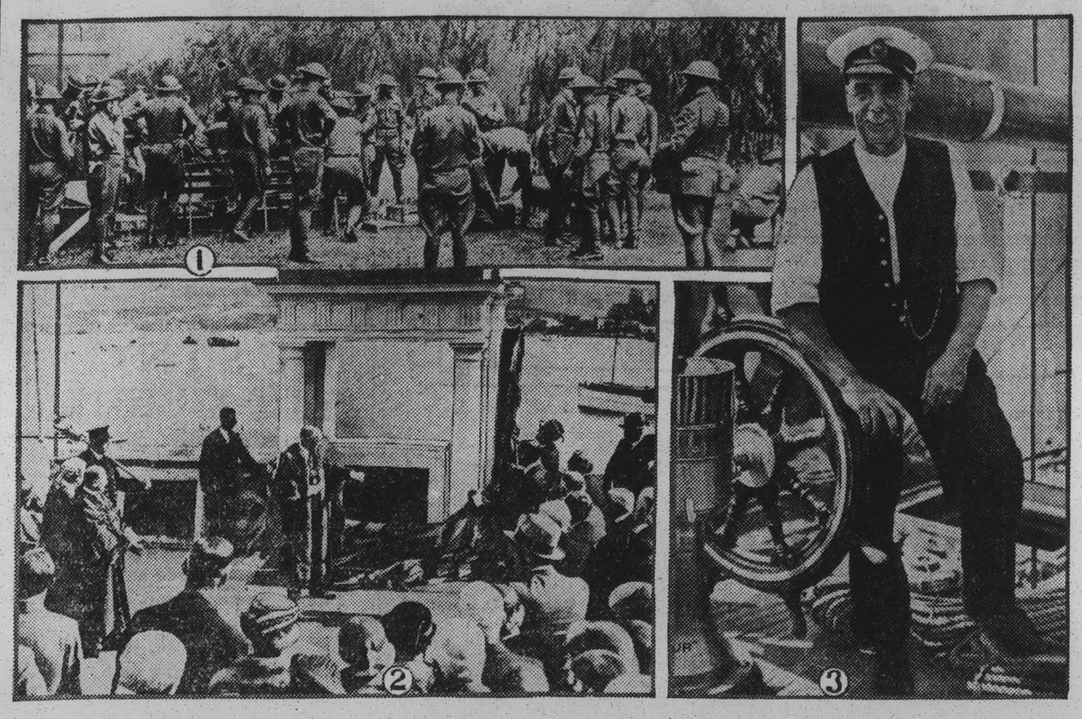

ONE of the maternal ancestors of Robert W. Bingham, ambassador to Great Britain, was born in Barnstaple, England, in 1630. Consequently Mr. Bingham went to that town the other day and was made a freeman in ancient ceremonies. The event also was made the occasion for an exchange of greetings between Barnstaple and the city of Barnstaple, Massachusetts. The English Barnstaple is the oldest borough in the country, having received its charter in 930. It is in Devonshire.

TOBACCO, which is the third largest crop in the United States, has always been without an organized futures market. But it has one now, for the New York Tobacco Exchange, Inc., on Broad street, has opened for business after two years of preliminary organization work in which the federal Department of Agriculture cooperated.

The contract basis is United States standard flue cured type 12, grade B4F. There are nine types and numerous grades deliverable under specified differentials under the form of contract that has been adopted. The unit of trading is 10,000 pounds, and quotations are in cents and five one-hundredths of a cent per pound. Delivery points have been established to date at Norfolk and Newport News, Va., and Louisville, Ky.

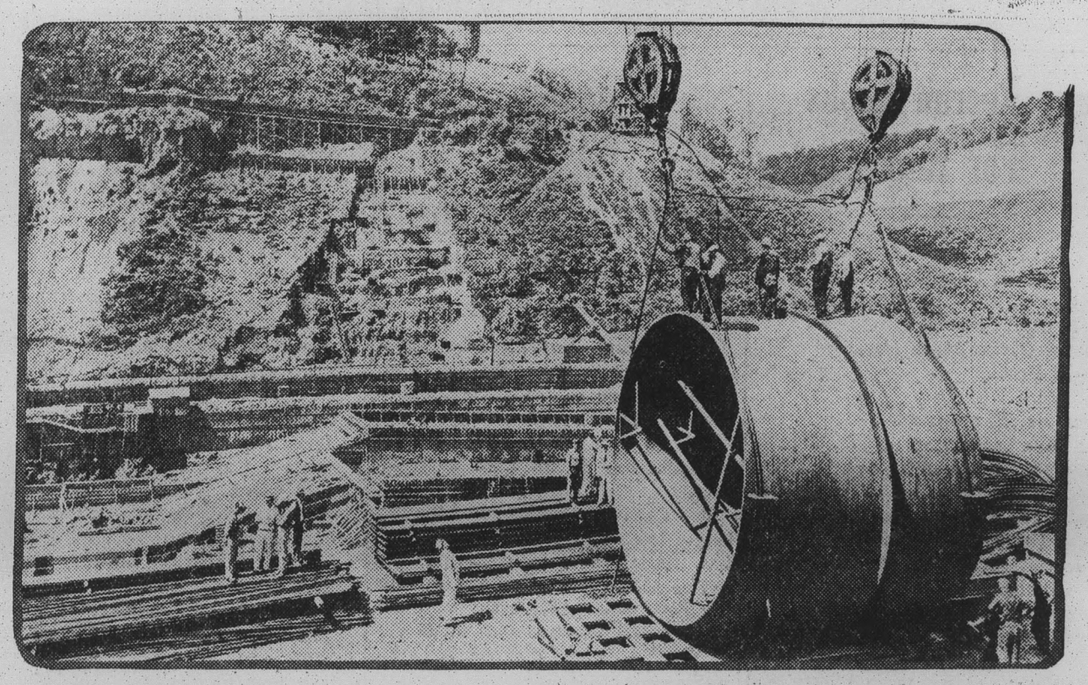

NEW YORK'S city assembly has adopted a lottery scheme for the purpose of raising relief funds, a way having been devised to circumvent the law. The business men and the clergy are protesting violently.

Rebuilding Chicago Stock Yards

Work of rebuilding the Chicago Stock Yards, largely destroyed by fire some months ago, is proceeding rapidly. The illustration shows structural iron work of the new amphitheater which will be completed in time for the International Live Stock exposition that opens on December 1. The eleven 200-foot steel arches are the largest of their kind in the country.

BEDTIME STORY FOR CHILDREN

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

AN UNDESERVED BAD NAME

FROM somewhere in the Old Orchard sounded a clear, "Kow-kow-kow-kow-kow-kow." It was quite unlike any verse Peter had heard that spring and he exclaimed, "Who's that?"

"That's Cuckoo," said Kitty the Catbird. "Do you mean to say you don't know Cuckoo?"

"Of course I know him," retorted Peter. "I had forgotten the sound of his voice, that's all. Tell me, is it true that Mrs. Cuckoo is no better than Sally Sly the Cowbird, and lays her eggs in the nests of other birds? I've heard that said of her."

"There isn't a word of truth in it," declared Kitty emphatically. "She builds her nest, such as it is, and she looks after her own children. The Cuckoos have been given a bad name because of some good-for-nothing cousins of theirs who live across the ocean where Bully the English Sparrow belongs, and who, if all reports are true, really are no better than Sally Sly. It's funny how a bad name sticks. The Cuckoos have been accused of stealing the eggs of other birds, but I've never known them to do it, and I've lived neighbor to them for a long time. As a matter of fact they are mighty useful birds. Farmer Brown ought to be tickled to death that Mr. and Mrs. Cuckoo have come back to the Old Orchard this year. Do you see that cob-webby nest with all those hairy caterpillars on it and around it up in that tree?"

Peter replied that he did, and that he had seen a great many nests just like it and had noticed how the caterpillars ate all the leaves near them.

"I'll venture to say that you won't see many leaves eaten around that nest," replied Kitty. "Those are called tent caterpillars and they do an awful lot of damage. I can't bear them myself because they are so hairy. Very few birds will touch them. But Cuckoo likes them. There he comes now; just watch him."

A long slim, dove-like appearing bird alighted close to the caterpillars' nest. Above he was brownish gray with just a little greenish tinge. Beneath he was white. His wings were reddish brown. His tail was a little longer than that of Mourner the Dove. The outer feathers were black tipped with white, while the middle feathers were the color of his back. The upper half of his bill was black, but the under half was yellow and from this he was called the Yellow-billed Cuckoo. He has a cousin with an all black bill who is called the Black-billed Cuckoo.

Cuckoo made no sound, but began to pick off the hairy caterpillars and swallow them. When he had eaten all those outside, he tore open the nest and picked out those inside, then he flew off as silently as he had come.

Mother's Cook Book

GOOD THINGS NEW AND OLD

THE following is a recipe which will appeal to the busy housewife because it is easy to prepare and is different:

Noodle Jelly Charlotte.

Cook one and one half cupfuls of half-inch wide noodles in salted water ten minutes. Drain and add butter, using two tablespoonfuls. Beat two eggs thoroughly, add two tablespoonfuls of water and add to the noodles. Place in a buttered baking dish and bake in a hot oven. Serve with jelly. Served with chicken or lamb it takes the place of potatoes.

Steamed Apricot Pudding.

Cream two tablespoonfuls of butter and a tablespoonful of sugar, add one beaten egg. Sift two cupfuls of flour with two teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt. Add the dry ingredients alternately with one cupful of milk. Grease one pound baking powder cans and fill two-thirds full with alternate layers of the batter and apricot jam. Place on rack in a kettle with boiling water and steam tightly covered two and one-half hours. Serve hot with a lemon sauce.

Dried Apricot Jam.

Take two pounds of dried apricots, let soak over night. Simmer well covered a half hour. Drain the fruit, crush thoroughly and mix with three pounds of sugar, or seven cupfuls. Put to boil and when at full boil continue one minute, remove from the fire and add one bottle of pectin, stir and let stand a moment and skim. Then pour into glasses and cover with paraffin.

Cherry Jelly From Canned Cherries.

Take two cupfuls of juice from canned cherries; if rich add water to make the two cupfuls; add four cupfuls of sugar and bring to a boil; add one-half bottle of pectin, stirring constantly and bring again to a full boil, then remove from the fire. Skim, pour into glasses and cover with a thin layer of paraffin. When cold add more hot paraffin to make a heavy seal.

Mashed banana put through a sieve, added to orange juice, sugar and cream, makes a most delightful frozen dish.

Do YOU Know—

That plaster of paris is derived from a mineral called gypsum. It is found in many parts of the world, but as a large part of Paris, France, happens to be built over whole beds of gypsum that city was the first to discover its use. Therefore small statuettes modeled from it were spoken of as being made of plaster of paris.

QUESTION BOX

By ED WYNN . . . The Perfect Fool

Dear Mr. Wynn:

What has happened to most of the veterinaries since Automobiles have replaced horses?

Yours truly,
MANNA WORE.

Answer: They work in gun factories mending "Colt's."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I have just secured a job as chauffeur. I'm to start two weeks from today and am supposed to sleep over the garage. I want the job, all right, but I cannot sleep in a strange bed. What shall I do?

Yours truly,
X. AUST.

Answer: As you don't begin for two weeks, ask your boss to let you sleep in the new bed for a few nights before you start working, then when you get your job you'll be used to the bed.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

Who started the idea that "13" was an unlucky number?

Sincerely,
SUE PERSTITION.

Answer: In 1803 a man was arrested for killing a woman. He was tried and convicted and given life. He blamed it on the jury and the judge. That's how it started. He figured 12 men on the jury and 1 judge made "13."

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I read an article in the newspaper which said that a baby in Bridgeport, Conn., feeding on elephant milk, had gained forty-two pounds in one week. Do you believe that?

Sincerely,
I. X. PECKWON.

Answer: Of course I believe it. It was a baby elephant.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I am about to take lessons in roller skating. My instructor told me to buy three skates. Why should I buy three skates when I have only two feet?

Yours truly,
JIM NASIUM.

Answer: As you are just learning, the professor figures you will not always be on your feet.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

I understand that every musical show has its own press agent. Can you tell me what he gets the name "press agent" from?

Truly yours,
I. M. SILLY.

Answer: He gets his name from squeezing chorus girls.

AFTER A VACATION

By ANNE CAMPBELL

HOW lovely is our little world
When we have been away!
The grass at dawn with dew is pearl'd,
The hollyhocks are gay.
No porch is half so welcoming
As ours when evening comes.
We missed the happy blossoming
Of blue delphiniums.

Our world seems much more glamorous
Since we came back again.
Outside we hear our clamorous
And saucy friend, the wren.
Our little pear tree grew, we know,
And where the shadows fall,
There is a splash of golden-glow
Against the garden wall.

The world of home is loveliest
When we come back once more
To find that love has stood the test
And waits beside the door.
There was no beauty quite like this,
Although we traveled far;
A kindly hand, a welcome kiss,
And home's familiar star!

Edison Disliked Decorations

Upon Thomas Edison's second trip to Europe the French Telephone company offered him a decoration which required that he wear a long sash. But the Ohioan flatly refused with the assertion that he couldn't "stand for that." Persuaded by his wife, he did however consent to wear the little red button of the League of Honor. But whenever he saw any American approaching he would slip the button into his pocket for fear, as he said, "they might think I am trying to show off."

ON THE eve of going to missions in far distant lands, Catholic priests and nuns in New York received instructions in the latest first-aid methods from Red Cross members. They then received certificates of proficiency.

Let Our Motto Be GOOD HEALTH

BY DR. LLOYD ARNOLD

Professor of Bacteriology and Preventive Medicine, University of Illinois, College of Medicine.

DIET FOR OLDSTERS

WE ARE now at last beginning to think of diet as a preventive of the degenerative diseases of older life, the diseases of the stomach, heart, kidney and pancreas. These diseases of older life are rapidly becoming more of a problem as our life expectancy increases. For instance, in Illinois in 1910 only 32 per cent of the population was over 35 years of age. In 1930, the number was 40 per cent—a gain of 8 per cent in 20 years.

In saying diet, however, I hasten to add that this article is not going to present spinach as the cure-all for these older diseases. Older persons may eat spinach "if there be such" as like it, but older people, thank goodness, have no drastic need for vitamines in their diet. It's the youngsters up to twenty years of age or so who must have foods that contain vitamines—who must have their spinach. We oldsters, done with our growing pains, can take it or leave it. And I for one leave it. That's personal, of course; spinach is good food, excellent food. I recommend it for babies and the teen age group. But—age has its compensations.

But coming back to our problem. No person past thirty-five has the physical tone of the person of twenty. As our muscles begin to show signs of sagging, our hair of thinning and our skin of drying, so do our internal organs lose their tone, in the same relative degree.

Particularly is this true of the digestive tract. The lining of the stomach begins to blanch, and the stomach secretes less acid. As we grow older this deficiency of the stomach to secrete acid affects a greater number of persons. In the forty to forty-five year age group, the number is 10 per cent to 12 per cent; in the fifty year group, 20 per cent; in the sixty year group, 30 per cent to 40 per cent; in the seventy year group, 60 per cent.

For years there has been controversy between practicing physicians and physiologists as to how this trouble was to be corrected. The physicians believed in relieving their patients by giving some form of acid as a medicine, while the physiologists laughed at them because they said with two or three pints of stomach juices requiring acidifying, it was foolish to think that a few drops of medicine taken by mouth in a glass of water could do the job.

Now, in a series of experiments we have been carrying on in the research laboratories of the University of Illinois, and which we are just now ready to make public, we have found at last that the physician is right. And the physiologist was wrong when he thought stomach acidity was the main factor in digestion. It is not. However, the acidity of the stomach juices has a great deal to do with the health of the individual. For at the laboratory we have proved that when there is no acid secretion in the stomach, the bacteria from the lower intestines can make their way into the upper intestines and the stomach, and the absorbed products can reach the heart and kidneys. And if these latter organs are already showing signs of degenerating, then the addition of these lower intestinal products helps in their still further degeneration.

When the stomach is acid, however, the intestinal bacteria cannot get either into it or the upper intestine. It is as if the stomach acidity made a gate through which the intestinal bacteria cannot pass. With this fact known our problem then was to find how to make the stomach juices acid for anyway two to four hours after eating, when the major work of digestion goes on. We tried many experiments. It was found that synthetic acids such as 1 per cent citric, lactic, hydrochloric, sulphuric—one was as good as another—helped when taken in water at meal time. But who wants to be taking medicine at every meal?

Foods were tried out. And then through experiment after experiment we proved that a diet rich in acid and poor in alkaline would do the trick.

So in the diet for the older person we can forget vitamines as a factor. It's acidity we are after. Simply eat plenty of lean meat, eggs, butter, fresh fruit, green foods, other fresh vegetables. Go easy on potatoes, however, cereal foods, pastry, other starches, sweets, all fats except butter. I said green foods, you notice. And spinach is a green food. So if you like it, eat it. But there are many other kinds of green foods beside spinach. There are turnip greens and beet greens, chard, asparagus, lettuce, celery and cabbage. Sour kraut is one of the best dishes older persons can eat. Sour kraut juice is good too, and so are tomato, lemon and pineapple juice. Do not drink much sweet milk, but drink freely of buttermilk.

Of course, diet will not cure a serious vital disease. Such diseases need the care of a physician. But if you have the ordinary intestinal distress that so many persons past forty experience, then try out this diet for a few months. And if you have as yet no symptoms, then this diet will aid you in preventing them.

In any case the diet will do no harm, so it is worth trying.

CLIMATE NOT A BIG FACTOR IN COLD 'CATCHING'

It's just as easy to catch cold in California as in Boston; just as easy to start sniffling in New Orleans as in Chicago, believes the Public Health Service.

Climate apparently makes no difference in the ease with which people take cold or the number of colds they have each year, it is concluded by the Service after a statistical study of colds and related diseases in various sections of the country.

Only one apparent connection between weather and colds was discovered. That was regarding temperature. It was found that the colder the weather, the more colds people seem to have. This was found to be especially true in the fall. Whenever there was an increase in colds and related illnesses, weather bureau records showed there was a drop in temperature during the same period.

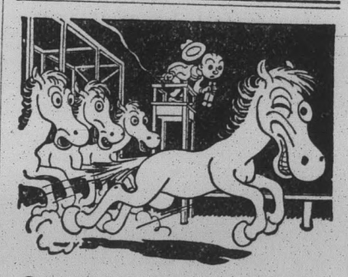

Other features of climate and weather seemingly have no effect on the frequency of colds. The humidity, or amount of moisture in the air, the amount of sunshine and cloudy weather, rain or snowfall, and calm or windy weather do not affect the population's coughs and snuffles.

The Public Health Service's study of colds was made in six cities declared to represent "the extremes of latitude, longitude and climatic conditions within the continental United States." These cities are Boston, Columbus, Ohio, Washington, Chicago, New Orleans and San Francisco.

Students in universities in each of the cities provided the data on colds by reporting every two weeks on the number of colds and related ailments they had in the meantime. Besides colds, this included bronchitis, tonsilitis, sore throat, influenza and pneumonia, as well as combinations of these diseases.

DECIMALS AND DOLLAR SIGNS !

What is in the offing is the inquiry—not only California but the United States? When the last Congress adjourned, we were in a tangent of decimals and dollar signs that almost staggered our minds! This was about the way the financial picture looked to the taxpayer. Congress made an appropriation of ten billion dollars and then pledged the Treasury to a further liability of six more billion; and with a fat deficit of another four billion this was the lineup. Now it is well known that we are paying the penalty of years of extravagance.

The total indebtedness of our great United States when Congress closed was approximately $35,000,000,000! But the sad part of it is, that this giant sum total will require more billions every year to carry the load. The states increased taxes and indebtedness until they now owe 20 billion dollars and have an annual tax burden of 12 billions. The total tax burden confronting the taxpayers, for all purposes, approximates 19 billions with a grand total indebtedness of $55,000,000,000.

These levies do not include process taxes upon clothing, foods, etc. It is estimated that at least 40 percent of the total income produced is being spent or invested thru government channels whereas 10 percent has been accepted as the dead line. Congress seems to have given every class of citizens relief except the taxpayer, but he is hanging on in all faith and fortitude, trying to think that it is just before dawn, when the sun of prosperity and justice will again shine over his head!

Maybe something is wrong; at least everybody seems to think so, or perhaps most of us, for if one can judge from the trend of conversation on the street, we are plunged into fearful anticipations of the tomorrow. We hear of extravagance and wastefulness. taxation and starvation. It is a fearful state to be in, with an indwelling feeling without promise of much relief.

The ballot box seems to have failed; men of integrity have failed to cure the cancer that is eating into the vitals of our national commonwealth. Nevertheless this great old United States of America has never failed yet, and it has passed thru some terrific storms sailing the Ship o' State over tempestuous seas.

Man's effort may fail to curb the struggle, but there is an enduring power at the helm of our destiny, doing more than a seaman at the steering wheel. This helper can still the storm and cause calm to come out of chaos. If only men could but see!

Harriet Beecher Stowe, the lamented author of the celebrated volume, "Uncle Tom's Cabin," died 38 years ago at Hartford, Connecticut. When this popular work was first printed in book form 10,000 copies were sold the first week and 300,000 in the first year. Half a million copies had been distributed in the United States alone in its first five years and it has been translated into more than a score of foreign languages and dialects. It is estimated that the entire sale of the book in the years since it was written have exceeded 12,000,000, about 7,000,000 of which never paid any royalties to the author, being sold in foreign countries before the stablishment of international copyright law. The copyright, under the then existing statute, expired a few years previous to the author's death in the late nineties. This wonderful woman has left this immortal paragraph to her posterity: "Let us give everybody a right to live his own life, as far as possible, and avoid imposing our own peculiarities on another."

The outlook for the wheat crop is nothing to be severely alarmed over, altho nearly 20 million bushels under the normal in the United States. We shall continue to feed on bread as usual, but it is possible that some sections of the world will feel the pinch of poverty brought on by a scarcity and higher prices. The total world crop is 491,000,000 bushels, while the average yield in former years has been approximately 885 million bushels per annum. If Uncle Sam wishes to preserve his posterity, he will never again order a curtailment of the wheat crop. There are other means for equalizing the pressure in a time of depression when surpluses run rampant in other sections. The economic law of conservation is yet a very important institution in good government.

Recent generations will remember the nation-wide drought in 1871, when on the 9th of October, 63 years ago a maiden went out after dark to milk a cow; the cow kicked over the lantern that soon set fire to the stable which developed into the famous Chicago fire burning a large part of the metropolis with a loss of property that ran into the hundreds of millions, both business and residential. From the historical side, a Mrs. O'Leary was milking a cow in the stable as stated above. Whether this is true or just a fairy tale is still a problem. One hundred years ago Chicago was a mere log-cabin settlement with less than 100 inhabitants and was called Fort Dearborn. Today its population is 3,376,438 with an area of 215 square miles.

As a match for constructing gigantic engineering feats such as this state is pursuing, England has just completed a tunnel under the Mersey river over two miles long and forty-six feet in diameter. The tunneling cost $40,000,000 and is the longest under-water traffic artery known. There are four travel lanes, amply provided to meet the congestion between Liverpool and Birkenhead, the center of one of the busiest harbors in the world. No doubt San Francisco Bay bridges will exceed the English project as a world accomplishment in giant engineering.

President Roosevelt has made a hobby of the study of trees and shrubbery. His love for a tree might well be classed with that of the lamented poet, Royce Lilmer, who wrote "God Loves a Tree". Since the President has reached mature years he still shows intense interest in trees and reforestation; only it is more than a fad—it is a gospel from sincere conviction. He not only appeals to congressmen but would have commoners prove their devotion toward supplanting lands back to forests—lands that were shorn of trees for selfish gain.

Parent Teacher Ass'n

Ocean Beach PTA members and friends met Wednesday afternoon at 2 p. m. in the Methodist church near the school.

Miss Marian Evans, from the better films conference very ably pointed out what the movies do to your child. What the average citizens are doing to the movies was defined in no uncertain terms by statistics taken from 5th and 8th grade boys and girls, showing boys prefer adventure pictures to love scenes; girls prefer comedy and romance to sentiment. Newsreels rated high with both grades With this material in hand we are better able to plant fine and wanted entertainment, both from the producer and parent standpoint.

Mrs. D. H. Horner, study group leader, outlined plans for a parents study group. "No studying is necessary on the part of the parent," says Mrs. Horner, as Mrs. J.C. Brewer will lead the class and bring to us all of the technical knowledge and theory of a trained nurse with a varied experience in children's hospitals combined with the understanding and love of a mother's heart. The first study group meeting will be held in the Scout hut on the Methodist church lot Wednesday morning at 10:30 a. m. October 17th. Discussion of diet, sleep, health habits and discipline will be gone over

If you missed the opportunity to hear Mrs. Brewer last year plan to grasp it now. Meetings are most informal and friendly and it is not necessary that you are a member of the PTA in order that you attend. All mothers are welcome. "Better informed mothers for all children" is our slogan.

Mrs. Anna Forsythe, Helen Parks and Grace Leonard sang a group of songs accompanied by Miriam Frieze at the piano

Those who charmingly assisted in Wednesday's meeting were our 1st grade room mothers: Mrs. Marjory Applegate, Florence Holmerud, Ruth Bailey and Mrs. G. Z. Plummer, who served steaming coffee and chocolate covered cup cakes carrying out the Hallowe'en motif in a pot of old-fashioned marigolds and pumpkin colored napkins.

Mrs. Florence McCausland, president, expressed her pleasure on having so many new people attending our meetings. Our goal is 200 members.

MARINE SECRETS REVEALED

Secrecy, which surrounded the probable strength of the San Diego Marine football team's strength, was a punctured bubble last Sunday, when the powerful squad took the field and defeated Santa Ana, by a score of 25-0, at Sports Field, before a crowd of 3200 fans. After the game no one could deny that the Marines are, again, the major football team of San Diego.

Rumors that Bauer, who ranked with Tom Hamilton, as the greatest players to ever appear here, would not be in the line-up, were spiked, when the big fellow was discovered on the bench. Later in the game he crashed thru the defense with two driving plays to score.

Next Sunday, the Marines face Santa Barbara, a powerful club, that always gives the opposition trouble. This year they are hopeful of defeating the Marine team and bid for a post-season game, to be played here. The game will be played at Sports Field, and the game time is set for 2:15. The following Saturday night, Oct. 20, the Marines will face Pomona college in a night game at the field.

COACH PURDY SAYS BOYS AND SELF SHOULD BE EXCUSED

"No boy can play football for several years without becoming a better man for his experience in the game," Coach Purdy told the Parent-Teacher association of Point Loma high school at their regular meeting on Tuesday afternoon, October 9th, in the school library. He was the first of the teachers who will be called upon during the year to carry out the aims of the program committee in coordinating faculty and parents in their view point. Coach Purdy also said that the strain of the afternoon practice was apparently not always as difficult to the boys as the task of offering an acceptable explanation of the lateness of arriving home, to the mothers, and in some cases the coach was called on the phone to corroborate Tom's or Bill's story. Coach Purdy closed his pithy remarks by comparing what a boy has to expain to mother to what a coach sometimes has to explain to a wife, leaving the answer with the audience.

Two other members of the faculty, Miss Fenton of the home economics department, and Mr. Riley of the technical arts, also spoke. Mr. Riley said that so called "frills" into which group the wood shops and metal departments were often relegated, became a practical education when sonny was called upon to fix a door or a spring around the home.These courses give a boy a definite idea of what the trades are like.

The main speakers of the afternoon were Mrs. Jess Ward, of the department of education, working under the educational program of the SERA, and Mrs. Flora Brarens, district membership chairman of the ninth district of the PTA. Both of these talks were interesting and instructive, and especially timely in view of the membership drive now in progress. Those who are not yet lined up on the side of the PTA are urged to get their membership in at once.

M. E. CHURCH SERVICES

"A Churchman's Citizenship" will be the basis for a sermon Sunday morning at the Point Loma Methodist church, corner of Saratoga and Sunset Cliffs Blvd. The pastor, Rev. James H. Hughes, will preach.

The Sunday school will meet at 9:45 a. m. with classes for all ages in religious education.

Young People's service at seven o'clock in the evening.

THE OCEAN BEACH THEOSOPHICAL CLUB

Theosophy is a system of religio-philosophical and indeed scientific thought running back into immemorial time and which so far as the recorded annals of history go, has no known beginning. It is found universally, that is to say, all over the globe and vestiges of it are discovered in the present representatives of every former race of men. George Simpson as leader of the discussion for the Ocean Beach Theosophical club will trace the movement back thru the pages of history and legend at the meeting Thursday evening, October 18th at 7:30 in the civic center on Abbott street. Questions are invited and all interested are welcome.

LEADING CITIZENS INDORSE WHELAN

A rapidly growing list of indorsements pointing to the outstanding record achieved by Thomas Whelan, District Attorney, and staff, indicates the determination of taxpayers of San Diego county to keep Mr.Whelan in office.

The following statements were selected at random from the list:

"The District Attorney's office under Thomas Whelan and staff has been the most competent ever known in San Diego county."
Fred Kunzel.

"I am glad to be able to assist in the re-election of Thomas Whelan as District Attorney. His record is good."
E. Swift Torrance.

Thomas Whelan has been the most efficient District Attorney during my ten years' residence in San Diego county."
J. K. Ward.

"Without qualification, I am for Thomas Whelan for District Attorney."
Maurice M. Meyers.

"Thomas Whelan is my choice for District Attorney. He is the logical man."
W. B. Kitts.

"I favor the candidacy of Thomas Whelan for District Attorney. The excellent organization he maintains in his office indicates executive ability, and I know he is a good lawyer."
Frank A. Gazlay.

RULES TO FOLLOW IN CHOOSING FRESH BEEF

Every housewife would be her own beef expert if she followed a simple judging plan suggested by Mrs. Julia Lee Wright, director of the Safeway Stores Homemakers' Bureau.

It isn't necessary to take the butcher's word for it, says Mrs. Wright, if the beef checks with these four tests of quality:

1. Is the flesh of fine grain and velvety texture, and a good red color?
2. Is the fat liberally distributed along connective tissues and between muscles, flaky in texture, and creamy white in color?
3. Is connective tissue evident in only a small amount?
4. Are bones fresh looking, porous, and pink in color?

It takes only a second to make the test, and hundreds of experiments show that it is reliable. Mrs. Wright announced the test in conjunction with the Safeway Beef Campaign, for which the finest beef obtainable has been obtained.

HIGH TIDE,..A FEAST FOR BIRDS

The wild waves dashing against the rocks, the waves creeping in on the sand, a few feet from the board walk. The little sea birds,pee-wee,sand dabs and snipers of all sizes, so brave waiting patiently closeby.

And when the tide went out,leaving kelp and refuge on the beach, frightened sand flies and bugs, millions of flies, those little sea birds began devouring the meal the wild waves sweep in.

Was it because they were hungry that made them brave and patient?

Loma Portal PTA

"Become alert to danger" was the subject of a talk by Sergeant Wolfe of the San Diego police department before the Loma Portal PTA at the regular meeting Tuesday. 90,000 lives are lost every year of which 4100 are children. One half the accidents are caused by falls, other causes, poison, knives, etc. Usually as the result of carelessness and necessary repairs being neglected. Sergeant Wolfe also stressed the danger of driving a car when the mental re-action is fogged by alcohol.

The Loma Portal and Point Loma PTA study group led by Mrs. Helen Craw met Thursday evening at the home of Mrs. W. C. Bryant for the weekly discussion of child development

Next week Mrs. Craw will continue the subject of adolescence.

THOMAS WHELAN SAID TO BE CONSTRUCTIVE & AGGRESSIVE

(Contributed)

Thomas Whelan's mature judgment combined with his youthful initiative has given San Diego county an outstanding administration in the district attorney's office for the past 3½ years, according to persons familiar with the records.

Mr. Whelan, it is pointed out, has been constructive and aggressive. He unceasingly has warred on crime and at the same time has advanced many measures for the betterment of government and the welfare of citizens.

That Mr. Whelan has been efficient and economical is a matter of public record. These records show that he has lowered the expenses of his office many thousands of dollars each year, while at the same time work in the office has increased many percent.

That Mr. Whelan and his capable staff have won 88% of the felony cases they have tried is also shown by these records. This percentage stands at the top when compared to the statistics of other counties. The civil department of the district attorney's office, under Mr. Whelan, has both saved and gained thousands upon thousands of dollars for San Diego county taxpayers.

Mr. Whelan's personal record is as clean as his official one, say persons who know him. His friends are among the substantial people of all walks of life and his staff is composed of honorable citizens.

THOUSANDS ATTEND MIDGET RACES

Midget auto races have taken San Diego fans by storm, so much so, that last Sunday night, 3500 fans turned out at Sports Field, to watch these superthrill producers perform; and what a program they witnesssed, crashes, locked wheel dueling on the curves and spins a plenty.

Curly Mills took high honors in the nine event program, driving his new Miller built racing car to a sensational victory, over such well known drivers as Arvol Brunmier, Chet Mortemore, Art Scovel, Bob Swanson and others.

Sunday night, Swanson will have a new car, built to produce superior speed, and he claims it to be even faster than cars 15, 9, 45, 42, 77 or any of the high-powered speedsters. Swanson hopes to annex the 40 lap main event this week, with his new mount.

These tiny cars, capable of speeds as great as 110 miles per hour. on the straight-away, certainly give the fans plenty of kick.

G. De PURUCKER LODGE No. 37

You are cordially invited to attend a lecture sponsored by G. de Purucker lodge of Ocean Beach, Wednesday, October 17th, at 7:30 p. m., 4624 Granger St., Sunset Cliffs.

The speaker will be Geoffrey Barborka, and his subject: "How does Theosophy Explain the Mystery of Death?" Questions are invited and all are welcome.

COLORADO AND ILLINOIS DANCE AND CARD PARTY

The Colorado State Society and the Illinois club will hold their monthly dance and card party at the Chamber of Commerce, Saturday night, October 13. There will be two special and also card prizes.

THE THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY: POINT LOMA

In discussing the subject "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow" in his forum-lecture at Theosophical Headquarters on Point Loma last Sunday afternoon, Iverson L. Harris contrasted modern civilization with the civilizations of the past, especially the cultures of the Orient which attained to such fine spiritual heights under the inspiration and guidance of a long line of true teachers before ever our Western civilizations of Greece and Rome were out of their swaddling clothes. In touching very lightly on the present which is too close for a just perspective, the speaker visualized the future as follows:

"Would it not be a magnificent consummation if here in America there were lighted today, with the wick and fuel of yesterday, a torch for tomorrow that would make us the light of succeeding ages, a torch such as that lighted by Confucius and Lao-tze in China, by Buddha and Sankaracharya in India, or by Pythagoras in Krotona? Have we in America yet made our ripest contribution to human evolution and progress?"

Marjorie M. Tyberg, principal of Lomaland school, will speak on "A Friendly Universe" at 3 o'clock at Theosophical Headquarters next Sunday, October 14th. All are welcome.

Point Loma PTA

The benefit bridge tea, planned to swell the treasury of the Point Loma Parent Teacher association, met with such an unexpected response until more reservations came in than could be accomodated at one party. This affair was planned for Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Everet N. Curtis, 2406 Locust street, in Loma Portal. To offset a condition of this kind it was hastily decided to turn the affair into two parties of eighteen tables each, the first to be held at two p. m. and followed by tea at four o'clock to which teachers of the Point Loma High school would be specially invited guests; and the second to be an evening desert bridge to which fathers as well as mothers might come. In this way approximately forty tables were entertained. The social committee, consisting of Mrs. W. K. Brown chairman, Mrs. Paul Wolcott and Mrs. Charles Sieck, are being congratulated by officials and others interested in the Point Loma Parent Teacher association, on the wonderful success of this, their first party of the year.

EPIC CARD PARTY

WCTU HOLD CO. CONVENTION

The 49th annual county W C T U convention held in San Diego Tuesday of this week was a very successful and well attended meeting. Ocen Beach union was well represented.All officers were reelected for the coming year. The county presidents reported much interest and enthusiasm, especially in the local option measure to be oted on in November. One of the best features of the convention was the address of our state lecturer Mrs.Lulu Shephard, who showed by conclusive facts that the promises made by the repeal advocates had not been realized in any way.

A beautiful tribute was paid to the memory of Mrs. E L Miller, who had been county president for six years. She was a member of Ocean Beach union at the time of her death one year ago.

The regular meeting of the local WCTU, will be held at the home of Mrs. F. R. Felt, 4475 Del Monte ave. at 2 p. m. The subject for the meeting will be citizenship. Answer to roll call by some report of convention.

—Minnie H. Clarke, Corr. Secy.

GOODWILL TO HAVE EXHIBIT WITH 1935 EXPOSITION

Space has been reserved at the Exposition to be held in San Diego next year for a fitting exhibit of the work of the Goodwill Industries, the cost being paid by a friend, states Rev. Myron Insko, the Goodwill superintendent, in submitting his monthly report to the local board of directors.

The sales of the Goodwill store increased 41% last month, as compared with Sept. 1933, and this permitted an increase of 47% in the cash wages paid. The number of customers was 3261.

Salvage materials are showing a seasonal dropping off, Mr. Insko reports, and he asks for more newspapers, magazines, rags, discarded clothing, etc., to supply work with wages for the aged, otherwise handicapped and needy folk who go to Goodwill seeking "Not Charity but a Chance".

She turned to wave her hand before she entered the path to the back door, opened it in response to a soft, cushiony:

"Come in!"

The kitchen was gay with blue and white checked gingham curtains at the plant-filled windows, a blue and white linoleum on the floor, blue pots and pans arranged on the shelves. Spotless town, if ever there was one.

"Glad you've come, Miss Prue. I cut that bokay for you. Wasn't that Rod Gerard with you? I wonder what's keeping him in this part of the country so late in the season."

"He is looking after his timber."

"Lors! I hope he and Calloway won't get into trouble again. Len's been jealous of Roddy since they were boys, when little Milly Gooch, the circus folks' kid, was always turning down Walt and Len for him. Len thought 'twas because Rod's folks were rich and a fine family, but what did the child care for that? She just about worshipped Roddy. Then there was bad feeling between the two before Lon went west. He gets terrible ugly if he's crossed. I'm afraid he'll get the best of Rod, who's easy-going."

"Why not warn Mr. Gerard? He could escape before anything rough happens to him. It's good flying weather."

"Now, Miss Prue, don't you make fun of Rod."

"I'm not making fun of him; on the contrary, I am thinking of engaging him as my legal adviser."

"Then you've got another think coming to you."

Prudence wheeled. Her eyes widened as they met the dark, near-set eyes of Calloway, leaning against the door frame.

"Understand, Miss Schuyler, that if I cut your timber, I deal with you, with you and no one else. Gerard will keep out of my business or I'll know the reason why. He stepped between me and a girl once before—and it's for the last time."

Prudence regarded him from under sweeping lashes. "Just why are you inflicting me with the story of your young life?"

Even the bald spot of Calloways' head went crimson. "You won't get anywhere wisecracking with me. You'll come round sooner or later to wanting me to handle your timber—they all do—and when I do it, I won't stand interference from anyone. Get that?"

Prudence never before had realized her capacity for fury. "I get it. Now get this. There will be no interference when you cut my timber, Mr. Calloway, for you won't cut it. I have already contracted with Mr. Gerard to do it."

"Gerard! Gerard get out lumber! That's a joke. Don't run away with the idea that because he can pilot a plane he'd stick to anything that was work. He dances and games his days away. He'd run at the first touch of winter. As for managing a crew, his poor flabby muscles would make a fine showing in a lumber camp. They—"

"They are rather out of condition," agreed an icy voice behind him, "but, flabby as they are, I don't take that wallop sitting down, they can chuck you out."

Rodney Gerard's face was white, his eyes were afire, as he caught the surprised Calloway round the waist and by sheer force of arms and knees rushed him outside.

He returned and banged the door shut. He leaned against it, dusted one hand against the other, and observed somewhat breathlessly:

"Saw his red car here and came back. Business seems to be opening with a whang, partner."

* * * * * * *

For the third time in ten minutes Prudence rearranged the egg-shell cups on the butterfly table, lifted the silver skittle-ball kettle to make sure that the wick of the spirit lamp on its brazier-like stand would flame at the touch of a match. She glanced at the banjo clock. Only five minutes since she had looked before? Unbelievable. Time was creeping on hands and knees. The knocker? She glanced at the clock. Not time for her brother. Who could it be?

She went slowly through the hall. She ought to be prancing with eagerness at the prospect of a caller. She wasn't. Since the family scandal she dreaded to meet new people. She opened the door.

She knew at once, from Si Puffer's description, that the tall woman facing her was Mrs. Walter Gerard. Large blue eyes, large floppy hat, large patterned gown, perfect accessories. The village women were right, she was a "nifty dresser." She extended a white gloved hand.

"Good afternoon, Miss Schuyler. I am your neighbor, Mrs. Gerard, and this is my darling daughter Jean."

She drew forward a thin little girl in a soft pink frock who had been standing behind her. The child curtsied demurely. She had puckish dark eyes, pale, unhealthy skin, short hair.

"Won't you come in?"

Try as she would, Prudence couldn't infuse warmth into her invitation. She hated the suave voice, hated the way the woman flicked her eyelids, hated her smile, hated the flutter with which she settled into the wing chair. The child sat primly on the ottoman beside her, her eyes darting about the room like a ferret's.

Mrs. Walter Gerard babbled: "So delighted to have a woman of my own kind near. Of course, our house is full during the season, but that isn't like having a neighbor. We hope that you will come often to High Ledges. What is it, dear?"

She inclined her head for the child's whisper. "The idea! No. No, of course not, Jean. She wants to prowl, Miss Schuyler, to see things. She is so intelligent. My cousin, the ambassador, says that she is the brightest child he has ever met. What an adorable skittle-ball kettle! Heirloom?"

Prudence wanted to snap, "No. Auction room." Mrs. Walter Gerard was so blatantly a person to whom family background would matter enormously in her estimate of a person, but she couldn't deny her father's great-grandmother.

"Yes."

"It is."

"But, my dear, don't you realize that it is a museum piece? That man's fame as a goldsmith has reached the ends of the earth. Fancy using it!" She settled back in her chair. "As I was saying, my brother-in-law is a bachelor; in consequence, I am never at a loss for young company."

Her wink fired Prudence with an unholy impulse to scratch her.

"But he's such a butterfly. He flits from flower to flower, never settles to one girl. A quite natural attitude for a rich man who has been pursued all his life, don't you think so, Miss Schuyler?"

She was intimating what Si Puffer had said, that Rodney Gerard was in terror of being married for his fortune. Did the woman think that she needed warning? A crash saved Prue's reputation for courtesy. Jean had been investigating the sugar bowl. The child scowled down upon it.

"Gee, it made me mad to drop that!"

Her mother folded complacent hands. "Darling daughter shouldn't touch things until she is better acquainted. She is interested in everything, Miss Schuyler."

"Uncle Rod calls me K. K., his K-urious Kid." Jean interrupted in a high voice. "He comes to see you every day, doesn't he?"

The elfish eyes interrogating her brought a wave of color to Prue's face, the rush as of many waters in her ears. Mrs. Gerard anticipated her answer.

"How amusing that you should have imagined that, darling. Your Uncle Rodney is an indolent, good-natured boy; perhaps he might allow himself to be monopolized—for a time. You have a brother, dear Miss Schuyler?"

"If she calls me dear once more I'll throw something at her," Prudence told herself furiously. Aloud she informed smoothly:

"Yes. I expect him at any moment." She deliberately looked at the clock. Never in her life had she been so rude, but never before had she had such occasion, she excused herself.

"Coming today! Happy girl! I'll run away, you must be busy. You will come to High Ledges when we return in the spring, won't you? We close the house soon, so I am afraid—"

"Uncle Rod isn't going," Jean announced.

"Rodney not going!" Mrs. Gerard's suave voice shrilled. Her face reddened unbecomingly. Her blue eyes hardened; then she laughed and winked.

"This darling has the strangest fancies, Miss Schuyler. You won't forget me, will you?" She extended her white-gloved hand, showed her long teeth in a large smile, and started along the herring-bone brick path with a springiness bordering on juvenility. Her daughter lingered to whisper hoarsely:

"I know why Uncle Rodney isn't going back to the city. He's goofy about you." She stuck her tongue in her cheek and ran.

Prue's eyes smoldered as she watched mother and daughter enter the luxurious maroon touring car.

"Horrid woman," she thought passionately. "I wager that you are a scold, a hypocrite. I feel as if my heart and soul had stumbled into a nettle patch. They are all prickles."

She crossed to the window and tried to concentrate her attention on the road by which her brother would come, but thoughts of her recent callers would intrude.

It seemed ages before Gerard's shining black roadster swept into sight. She darted between the brick gateposts as it stopped.

"David! Dave, you dear!" Her voice choked. Had her brother grown gaunter since she had left him? She sprang to the running board and laid her glowing cheek against his white one. He held her close for a moment. His eyes, so like hers, were warm and tender, his voice was humorously unsteady, as he admitted:

"Prue, I wouldn't have believed that I could have missed being coddled as I did. You've spoiled me. May I get out? This is a veritable armchair of a car, but I smell a wood fire and toast. I'm ravenous for that toast, aren't you, Gerard?"

Prudence blinked valiantly. "David, I'm as temperamental as ever. I forgot everything when I saw you. Mr. Gerard, remember that you promised to have tea with us."

"Thank you. I'm all for it. Better grab my arm, Schuyler. One is apt to be stiff after a long train ride."

Prudence put her arm under her brother's while Gerard steadied him on the other side. They led him to the wing chair in front of the fireplace. He sank into it and closed his eyes. Her breath caught in a strangled sob. He looked up and smiled.

Prudence dropped to her knees beside him. "David, it is wonderful to have you here. You—you put the heart into the house. We'll have the happiest time, and you will gain in weight and health every minute with the milk and eggs and chickens fresh from the garden. I'm some farmer already, am I not, Mr. Gerard? Why, when did he go?"

"I suspect that he slipped out when you and I forgot there was anyone else in the room, Prue."

"I'll bring him back, pronto."

She straightened the foot-cushion, dropped a kiss on the top of his head, picked up the silver kettle. No sign of Gerard in the dining room. She opened the kitchen door. He was perched on the corner of the pine table, his hands clasped about one knee as he talked to Jane Mack. Wonder of wonders! Macky was smiling!

"Tea is served in the club car!" Prudence announced in a stentorian tone, as she reached for the teakettle on the range from which to fill the silver one in her hand. Gerard seized it.

"Let me buttle. I'll feel like an outlander at this family reunion unless I can help."

In the living room Prudence seated herself on a low stool beside her brother's chair. She answered his questions to the accompaniment of the purr of steam from the kettle, the crackle of the fire, the tinkle of silver on china. She concluded:

"The evening I arrived I racked my brain for a name for these acres we have inherited which would make our coming seem like a new deal. I seized a word which has been hiding in the dark recently, pulled it out into the light, and named the place Prosperity farm. Get the psychology? I christened the car Success—so that it never will fail to get me to my destination—but I can't decide what to call the poultry. They've just got to lay eggs for me and I must resort to autosuggestion."

"What's the matter with Nickels?"

"Grand! Picture me scattering corn, calling, 'Nickels! Nickels! A little action this morning! Eggs, Nickels, eggs!'"

After tea Gerard carried the tray to the kitchen. Prudence could hear the faint rumble of his voice as he talked to Jane Mack.

"The impossible has happened! Macky's granite heart has been chipped at last, David," she confided.

"Gerard certainly has an engaging manner. What do you know about him?"

"Nothing, except that even in the late era of frozen assets the bulk of his fortune remained fluid. Mrs. Si is my authority. That woman is a regular Who's Who for this village. The fact that he is rich tells me all I want to know."

"All rich men are not alike, Prue. You and I have been unfortunate in some we have known."

"David, do you think that I will ever forget the result of Julie's marriage to a playboy? She was the sweetest big sister a girl ever had, and she died of a broken heart. Forgive me, Dave, forgive me," she pleaded, as his head dropped back against the chair and his eyes closed.

She caught his hands tight in hers. "Why, why did I bring that up! We'll forget it. It's behind us. You've had a long, tiresome day, David, why not go to your room, then I'll tuck you into bed, and tomorrow you'll be rested and refreshed and I will show you everything."

"That program sounds good to me." He laid his hand on her shoulder and rose. He was tall and pathetically thin, but he held his head, with its thick, dark hair, with royal dignity.

"Everything's going to be all right now, Prue. Already I feel stronger. I will go up as you suggest. Say good afternoon to—here he is now," David Schuyler added, as Gerard entered. "I have been ordered to bed by my tyrant, so I'll say 'thank you' for bringing me from the train, and obey." He offered his hand with cordial friendliness.

"Let me give you my arm. Those steep stairs look tricky. If she will promise to be good we'll let your sister trail along."

From the hall Prudence watched the two men as they slowly mounted the stairs. Tears blinded her. David looked so frail, so weary, as if too strong a wind might blow him away. She shut her teeth hard in her lips. It was her job to see that a strong wind didn't touch him. One didn't stop to question when the most precious person in one's life was in danger; one did things. She wasn't much good if she couldn't stand between him and trouble.

Someone knocking! Another caller? Why had the neighbors started to be friendly today of all ways when she wanted to devote herself to her brother? She opened the door. Her breath caught in a little gasp as she confronted Len Calloway.

By Sheer Force of Arms and Knees Rushed Him Outside.

"Good afternoon, Miss Schuyler. May I come in?" He entered the living room without waiting for an answer.

Prudence resented his assurance.

"I can't talk business now, Mr. Calloway. My brother has just arrived and I want to be with him."

"I won't detain you but a moment. I came to ask once more if you will give the contract for cutting your timber to me."

"I have already told you that I have arranged with Mr. Gerard to do it."

History of House Cats Dates Back to the Ark

The long, colorful history of the house cat had its dawning in the Ark—that is, if one is to take the word of Damirel, the great Arabian naturalist who wrote of animals in the Eighth century of the Hegira, according to a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

"When Noah entered the Ark his family represented to him that the mice would devour all their possessions; whereupon the patriarch addressed a prayer on the subject to Allah, who in response caused the lion to sneeze a full-grown cat from its nostrils—the result being that the mice were not only kept in order during the Deluge, but were impressed with that timidity that has made them lurk in holes ever since."

Notwithstanding the learned Arabian's ingenious account, more recent scientific investigation indicates that the Egyptians were the first to domesticate the cat—a species of the African wild cat.

The life of the cats in the Valley of the Nile would seem to have been a bed of catnip, figuratively if not literally. They enjoyed high privileges in being held sacred to Isis and to Pasht. In fact, cat-headed deities were not uncommon in the Egyptian Pantheon.

Mistreatment of the cat was a base crime in those days. Diodorus related that a Roman soldier who had killed a cat barely escaped with his life from the hands of the infuriated people.

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY

The Sapphire in the Moonlight

GEORGE MANNERS was very much in love with Mary Lascelles, of Middlesex, England, and proposed marriage to her.

She was an orphan and lived with her brother Edmund, but for some unaccountable reason he opposed the match.

The girl, who was one of the beauties of the neighborhood, was very fond of her brother, and in deference to his wishes she consented to postpone the wedding for an indefinite period.

Love deferred is very likely to be love enkindled, and George Manners was more than ever desirous of making the girl his wife.

They corresponded frequently, and one night Manners called unexpectedly to renew his suit.

The brother was not at home at the time and Manners consented to wait and see him.

The interview between the two men was not a pleasant one.

They retired to an adjoining room, and when they emerged, twenty minutes later, Manners had a very flushed face and Edmund Lascelles wore a look of dogged determination.

On leaving, the suitor offered to shake hands with Lascelles, but was repulsed.

As he left the house he freed his mind:

"I've asked you for the hand of your sister for the last time. I have tried to be nice, but my patience is at an end. The next time we meet the results may be a little different."

The girl was naturally distracted at this quarrel between the two men she loved most.

Lascelles was morose and silent for a long time and then he took his hat and left the house.

Shortly after ten o'clock that night two men came to the door of the cottage, carrying between them the dead body of Edmund Lascelles.

It was a terrible shock and Mary almost fainted. But before she had time to recover, George Manners came to the house, with his face and hands marked with blood.

He said that he had found the body in a ditch and had sent the men home with it while he remained to try to find some clue to the tragedy.

The circumstances were all against George Manners.

Nearly everybody was positive that he had murdered Lascelles, and it must be admitted that the evidence was against him.

But there was one who accepted his protestations of innocence and that was Mary Lascelles, the sister of the victim.

She did everything in her power for him at the trial, but in spite of that he was convicted and condemned to death.

Even then the devoted girl did not despair. She worked until she had secured a reprieve for the man she loved.

After that she enlisted the services of a detective and set about the seemingly hopeless task of securing evidence that would exonerate Manners.

Now one of the curious and shocking features of the crime was the fact that the right hand had been cut from the body of Edmund Lascelles.

It contained a costly sapphire ring that he had been in the habit of wearing.

No trace of the missing hand had been obtained before the trial of Manners, and when the detective—James Shropshire—began his belated task he kept this fact steadily in mind.

What had become of the hand containing the sapphire ring?

That was the question he asked himself, not once but a hundred times.

The first clue that he obtained was in the nature of footprints around the Lascelles home.

Although many weeks had passed, Shropshire found footprints in the grass.

These prints were carefully measured, as they did not correspond with the size of Manners' shoes.

The detective sought the village shoemaker and learned that they were about the size of the shoes worn by a farmer named James Parker.

More than this, the footprints when followed led to the house of this man.

An examination of his barn disclosed a knife that had been hidden in one of the stalls.

There was a loose board in the floor of the barn, and when this was removed the detective found the missing hand buried in the earth.

Parker, confronted with the evidence, confessed that he had murdered Lascelles.

He said he had been tempted by the sapphire ring, glistening in the moonlight, and that being unable to get it off, had severed the hand from the arm.

He was tried and condemned and soon after that George Manners and Mary Lascelles were married.

Recent Finds Confute Biblical Exodus Date

Recent finds of pottery by an expedition into southern Transjordan places the date of the exodus of the Israelites from Egypt in the Thirteenth century B. C., instead of the Fifteenth, as has previously been held by many Bible students, according to Prof. Nelson Gluek, head of the expedition and professor of Bible at Hebrew Union college in Cincinnati. The discoveries show that the Edomites and the Moabites did not become established in southern Transjordan until the Thirteenth century B. C. and therefore could not possibly have refused the Israelites passage through their countries, as stated in the Bible, until that time.

In addition, the expedition found rich deposits of copper and iron ore which they believe were one of the sources of the vast wealth of King Solomon. A copper mine was discovered which showed extensive working. It ran back into a cliff for more than 150 feet and veins of copper ore were discernible in the pillars of rock which had been left for support.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Before beginning his sermon one Sunday morning, a minister said that he was sorry to have to complain about the offertories. He felt bound, however, to make a protest and an appeal.

"In last Sunday's collection," he said, "there were no fewer than six buttons, I hope such a thing will not occur gain."

Then, turning to the Bible, he announced the text: "Rend your hearts, and not your garments."—Montreal Gazette.

City Management

"You once had some notoriously bad men in Crimson Gulch," said the traveling salesman.

"Times are different," answered Cactus Joe. "We've got some fine scenery, so we got polite and catered to the tourist trade instead of getting word through Chicago about the fine hideouts our hills would provide for bank robbers."

FROCK THAT HAS DOUBLE PURPOSE

PATTERN 9929

This frock—cut in large sizes—makes a point of creating a slim silhouette for the mature or "not-too-slender" figure. The unbelted waistline and surplice bodice do the trick perfectly. The sleeves are flared and most comfortable, and the large rever is smart fashioned of contrast. Appropriate for mornings or afternoons, according to the fabrics you choose — tubbable cottons for the mornings and printed silks for afternoons. You'll enjoy making this frock with the new Sew Chart, it is so concise and easy to follow.

Pattern 9929 may be ordered only in sizes 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, 44 and 46. Size 36 requires 3⅝ yards 36-inch fabric and ⅝ yard contrasting.

Send FIFTEEN CENTS in coins or stamps (coins preferred) for this pattern. Be sure to write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS, the STYLE NUMBER and SIZE.

UNHAPPY HOMES

"Would you marry a man for money?"

"No," said Miss Cayenne. "I've seen too many homes spoiled by husbands who were perpetually worrying about their income tax."

Insufferable

"WITCHES' RALLY" HALLOWEEN DANCE FOR ST. JOSEPH'S YOUNG PEOPLE'S CLUB

October's outstanding event for St. Joseph's Young People's club will be a gay costume Halloween social, the "Witches' Rally", to be held in the St. Joseph's Parish hall, Fourth Ave. at Beech street, San Diego, on Saturday evening, October 27, beginning at 9 o'clock. As all the annouced affairs of St. Joseph's Young People's club are open to the public, young Catholic men and women are requested to bring their friends and guests. Unique "bids", decorations, refreshments and entertainment will mark the evening.

Beside this one large affair the young men and women of St. Joseph's church are having a series of card games in the homes of the members, visitors playing any game they care for, with prizes for bridge and 500. Thus Catholics and their friends of all ages mix and have enjoyable evenings. On Sept. 24 the members held their first party in the home of Miss Mary Callaghan, 1629 Eighth Ave. October 8 saw the second party in the home of Miss Nan Sullivan, 2359 Fourth Ave. On October 22 the group and their guests and all visitors are invited to the home of Miss Katherine Kirkpatrick, 2526 Horton St., in San Diego.

The business meeting to be held on October 15 will be devoted to nominations and election of new officers for the final quarter of 1934. These new leaders will take their offices Monday eve, November 5, 1934.

St. Joseph's Catholic church, as the central parish of San Diego will hold its great "Mo Pac" celebration on December 7, 8 and 9, in the Parish hall, Fourth Ave. at Beech St.

CHURCHES OF CHRIST, SCIENTIST

"Are Sin, Disease, and Death Real?" This question constitutes the subject of the Lesson-Sermon on Sunday in all branches of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Mass. The Golden Text is from Isaiah: "The Lord is our judge, the Lord is our lawgiver, the Lord is our king: he will save us."

The Lesson-Sermon includes these words of Christ Jesus, from Matthew: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you: but if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses. . . . Judge not, that ye be not judged. For with what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged: and with what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again. And why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye?"

Passages from "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy, state: "God, Spirit, alone created all, and called it good. Therefore evil, being contrary to good, is unreal, and cannot be the product of God. . . . Only those, who repent of sin and forsake the unreal, can fully understand the unreality of evil."
